Pertinent Comment
BY GUS MALBERT

Tobogganing is fine sport—but not for a ball club, especially if that club happens to represent your town. Another trip down the greased plank was taken yesterday, and by that awful Norfolk crowd, too. Two shut-outs in two days, doesn't seem to indicate that the cork center offers any attractions to the Colts, when the opposing finger has the goods.

Looks about now as if we needed a few batters, a few pitchers and a few of most anything to help out for a little while.

Coming back to that cork center ball about which some of the fellows on the "big papers" have been writing, and to which they have attributed all of the heavy hitting which has been apparent in the big league, the argument doesn't seem to fit in with the actual happenings. For instance, the fact that the cork center, wrapped with rubber, gives the ball greater resiliency, and therefore causes the impact to drive it further, may be true, and doubtless is. But adding that the new ball goes further when hit, how will the critics account for the fact that the ball is actually being hit oftener. We have been able to account for the long hits, now how will we account for the anomaly with which the men have been hitting the ball.

Take a peep at the strikeout records of the pitchers up under the big ton-and notice what a diminution has been going on in this direction. Hitting the ball far is one thing, and hitting it often is another. The comeback will be that every contact with the ball now is apt to be safe, where with the old ball, it would fall into a fielder's hands. Again admitted, but come back to that strike out feature and remember it. Also remember that by far the most of the hitting has not been for extra bases, but for singles, which have been placed where the fielders "ain't." You can't charge that to the new ball.

Let's be fair about it. Part of the heavy hitting may be due to the new ball, but another part is due to poor pitching. And still another part is due to the fact that the pitchers have not yet rounded into form. And still another part is due to the fact that the men have been trained more in the art of batting, while a large, very large part, is due to the fact that modern pitchers, as did the pitchers of a few years ago, have about exhausted their bag of tricks and must evolve some new ball to fool the batsmen.

Continuing along the line of heavy hitting, Owner Bradley is thinking very seriously of cutting away the left field bleachers. That is, he is going to do away with that portion of the bleachers inside the foul line. So many balls have been hit into the bleachers and the men held to two bases when they might easily have made three, that he wants to remove the handicap.

It is absolutely no use to black type the statement that Jimmie Sullivan is looking for pitchers. It was simply a groundhog chase. He has got to look for pitchers. As matters now stand he hasn't got a pitcher, and he needs at least one. We—and your truly among the rest—have forgotten that in the earlier games the other teams were simply trying out their men and that the teams which Richmond defeated in the earlier stages are not the teams against which the Colts are now playing. In other words, the other teams have strengthened, while we, being fooled into security, because we licked a few half-formed teams, have been sitting quietly in the boat.

This is not intended as a roast. Almost any one will be fooled into a feeling of security when a team keeps on winning. It is only by defeat that we can see our weak spots. The defeats have come, and with these defeats has come a realization that the team needs pitchers; therefore no marvel that pitchers are being looked for.

The best we can get now is one from Norfolk, and then come home and take it out on Lynchburg.

All preparations for the horse show, which will open Saturday, are now complete, and from the list of events it will be the best ever held here.
